

WHERE, WHEN, HOW, WHY

do theatre and science meet?

The extraordinary meeting held in Coimbra, Portugal, on November 25–27, 2021 revealed a rich ecosystem of academics, theatre practitioners and science communicators, from all over the globe, who perform, communicate and/or reflect upon science through theatre.

Their work addresses a variety of perspectives on the theatre/ performance and science intersections, such as geographies, histories, scientific disciplines and topics, audiences, participants, venues, formats, scientific approaches in theatre practice, displaying an intense practice and research in this field.

Considering this effervescent context, we are excited to organise the 2nd International Conference Theatre about Science: theory and practice, taking place on November 9–11, 2023. This year's conference gathers contributions ranging from the performing arts to the communication of science, from academic to practical research and performance, and explores connections of theatre with formal, natural, health and social sciences.
